the history

The Edith Macefield home is a historic piece of Ballard neighborhood history. The home caught attention when Edith Macefield turned down a $1-million offer from developers because of family history, memories, and simply because it was her home. Development persisted around the house, even as Edith refused offers and continued to live in her home. She left the house to the superintendent of the development project when she passed. The house is rumored to be the inspiration for the animated film "Up" due to similarities in the storylines. Nowadays, the house is a staple of the community.
